ABSTRACT

Based on data collected by the American Association of Junior Colleges (AAJC), this directory provides information on 652 junior colleges in the United States and its territories, Canada, and other selected countries for 1956-57. Following introductory material on the scope of the directory, tables provide statewide summaries of the following data for all junior colleges, and for public and private junior colleges: number of colleges, AAJC membership, student enrollments and status, and numbers of full- and part-time faculty. Next, the directory lists the colleges alphabetically by state, providing the following information for each: location; administrative head; AAJC membership; state recognition or accrediting agency; type of control or affiliation; co-educational or single-sex status; date founded; enrollments for 1956-57 broken down by freshman, sophomore, or unclassified status, adult enrollments, and full- or part-time status; and full- and part-time faculty members. The following sections provide a list of individual AAJC members; an alphabetical listing of junior colleges; a directory of national and regional junior college organizations; and a directory of junior college honorary societies and social organizations. Finally, an analysis of junior college growth reviews changes in the number of colleges and enrollments from 1900 to 1957, the size and location of colleges, faculty numbers, types of colleges and forms of control, and accreditation agencies. Junior College Directory, 1958

Compiled and Edited by AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF JUNIOR COLLEGES

JESSE P. BOGUE, Executive Secretary

The Directory contains information about junior colleges in the United States, its territories, Canada and a few other nations. The list comprises both accredited and non-accredited institutions. In general, institutions have not been included when they have not been designated as junior colleges by state departments of education. Every reasonable effort has been made to secure accurate information about each college. In this undertaking heavy reliance has been placed on the accuracy of the reporting junior college.

Separately organized junior colleges on campuses of senior colleges, general colleges, or lower-divisions of four-year colleges and universities have been included only if they are active members of the American Association of Junior Colleges. Undergraduate centers and extension centers, as in Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, are included in the listings in view of the fact that they are essentially two-year colleges.

More extensive and detailed information about junior colleges may be secured in American Junior Colleges, fourth edition, edited by Jesse P. Bogue, and published by the American Council on Education, 1785 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington 6, D.C., 1956.

Definition of Terms

Administrative Head. Each institution's designation of its administrative head has been accepted. The official title has been indicated following the name. It is assumed that this person is the one to whom correspondence should be addressed. It is not implied that in all cases the designated administrative head holds final administrative responsibility for the college.

Accreditation. The American Association of Junior Colleges does not act as an accrediting agency. Member institutions are prohibited by constitutional provisions from indicating, implying, or publicizing accreditation by this Association. Types of accreditation or equivalent recognition or approval are indicated by symbols as follows:

State Department of Education; the Board of Education in the District of Columbia; the Junior College Accrediting Commission in Mississippi; the Provincial Department of Education in Canada.

D¹—Indicates approval to operate as a junior college

Control. The primary basis for classification is twofold: institutions publicly controlled and institutions privately controlled. The first group is divided into state, local or municipal, union district, county, and joint county junior colleges; the second into those under denominational control or affiliation, non-denominational and nonprofit institutions, and proprietary institutions. Year Organized. Each institution was asked to report the year it was organized as a junior college. In some cases the date of origin of an institution which later developed into a junior college may have been given.

Enrollment. Enrollment data are given for the year June 1, 1956, to May 31, 1957, unless otherwise stated. A "special student" is defined as a student who is not classified as either a freshman or sophomore because he is carrying less than a full-time load but who can be considered to be working toward a degree, diploma, or certificate. An "adult student" is defined as one who is above the compulsory school age and who would not be classified as a freshman, sophomore or special student.

Faculty. The number of faculty is given for the same year as the student enrollment. The full-time faculty equivalent total is the sum of the full-time faculty and the full-time equivalent of the part-time faculty.

Membership. Membership in the American Association of Junior Colleges is indicated by an "M" or a "P" depending upon whether the membership is full or provisional. Active membership is open to any college which has received complete accreditation or equivalent recognition of any of the types indicated under "accreditation" above. Provisional membership is open to newly organized institutions and to others which have not yet received such recognition.

Analysis of Junior College Growth

JESSE P. BOGUE

THE ANALYSIS of junior college growth is designed to give the reader a quick and general view of what has taken place in this educational movement from its inception to the present time. The year 1900 has been fixed arbitrarily as the starting point. The number of colleges and enrollments in 1900 are estimates only. It is well known that before the year 1900 there was a considerable number of two-year institutions of higher learning. This was especially true of the two-year normal schools.

There were various expressions of thinking during the latter part of the 19th century with respect to the need for the reorganization of the American school system. In this thinking it can be observed that attention was being given to an intermediate type of institution. It was felt that a considerable amount of education offered in senior institutions in the freshman and sophomore years could be done better in two-year colleges. True university work should begin, so it was stated, at the junior year in a university atmosphere and by university methods. Those who may be interested in this phase of junior college analysis may consult the records of such institutions as the University of Minnesota, the University of Michigan, University of Chicago, Leland Stanford University, and several others.

The junior college, organized in its own right as a separate and distinct institution of higher education, began to emerge in about the year 1900, hence the reason for fixing this date as the beginning point for this analysis. It is not claimed now that all two-year colleges have achieved clearly identifiable recognition as institutions in their own right. This is, however, the definite trend at the present time. Almost without exception wherever the two-year institutions are growing with greatest rapidity they have, as the New York State Board of Regents has stated, "a meaning and competence in their own right."

Junior college growth in number of institutions and in expansion of enrollments has been all of a piece with similar developments in all education. The rapid growth of high schools and all institutions of higher education since the year 1900 is too well known to require repetition. All colleges and universities were flooded with students following World War II because of the G. I. Bill of Rights and because vast numbers of young men and women had been compelled to delay their education by reason of military service.

Moreover, an examination of the needs of society, of our economic development, and of national security indicates that one of our basic needs is for far greater numbers of highly educated and trained people. Professionally educated personnel also requires great numbers of well-qualified assistants in business, science, manufacturing, communications and in almost every phase of our social structure. The democratic ideal of the American way of life sets a goal of equality of educational opportunity for all persons. Then, too, the higher levels of professional and semi-professional occupations can be fully sustained in a democratic government only as the general level of education is raised and maintained for all citizens. The understanding, appreciation, and willingness of the rank and file of citizens to support higher education are results of the general educational levels they have gained.

We have cited a few of these well-known facts to indicate that the junior college movement in this century is not an isolated phenomenon. It is part and parcel of the total upgrading of the people in education and training. In a recent publication issued by the National Association of Manufacturers it is stated that "if you had nothing to do all day but sit around and count the number of inventions, discoveries and startling new advances that science and technology have made in your lifetime, you would be an old man before reaching E for electronics!" It is into this kind of society that we have come and the key to successful living in it is more and better education at all levels. Advancements made in the first half of this century, and the indications of further revolutionary developments in every phase of civilized society, are tokens and prophecies of far greater developments in the second half. The past record of advancement in junior and community colleges should be an indication of the direction these institutions will take in the future.

Table IV will give the reader a picture of the growth in the number of colleges and in enrollments from 1900 to the year 1956-57. The number of students is by head count of every person who attended a two-year college for one or more courses during the sessions held from June 1, 1956, until May 31, 1957. The number includes full-time, part-time matriculated students classified for credit, and special and adults who were enrolled for short courses or for informal education. It will be observed that there have been fluctuations in enrollments during the years and that these have paralleled war years and other national crises. For example, while the year 1943-44 shows a sharp decline in enrollments, the year 1946-47 shows that there was a 54.5 per cent increase over the previous year. These changes were almost wholly caused by the war. There were large and steady expansions during the latter years of the 1930's largely because of the depression on the finances of the nation. Since 1953-54, the growth has been stabilized at about 11 per cent from year to year. If the reader wishes to indulge in predictions for the future growth of junior colleges, he may base it on the results which could come about by the continued growth of from 10 to 12 per cent each year until 1965 to 1970.

Plans being made now in many of the states for junior colleges, the increasing holding power of high schools, the ever-increasing percentage of high school graduates seeking to enter college, the advancing scientific and technological aspects of society which are requiring more and better educated people—all point to the prediction that by 1965 to 1970 there will be between 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 students enrolled in junior and community colleges the United States. About one-half of these will be freshmen and sophomores. Table V is presented to show the growth of the number of institutions, those under the control of public authority and those that are independent or church-related, and the percentage of change between the two main types. From 1900 until 1947-48, public junior colleges were in the minority. Since then public institutions have been established more rapidly than others so that by 1956-57 they represented 57.8 per cent of all two-year colleges. The net gain in public junior colleges, as reported in this Directory, is 14 over the previous year and three for the independent colleges. One reason for the larger gain by the public colleges is the inclusion of the two-year extension centers of Indiana University. The small net gain of independent colleges is partly due to the discontinuance of a few and the fact that some others became four-year institutions. The extension centers of Indiana University have been included for the same reasons as those for Pennsylvania State University, the University of Wisconsin, and Purdue University in Indiana. Here again, the Junior College Directory includes a comprehensive report on all institutions accredited by state departments of education or regional accrediting associations as definitely organized two-year colleges, extension centers of universities, technical institutes, or teachers colleges.

We believe that diversity of institutions in the junior and community college movement, while somewhat confusing to some, is one source of its strength. There are diversities of student interest and talent. There are wide diversities of employment outlets for graduates of two-year institutions and for those who aspire to continue their education and training beyond two years in post-high school. Considered from this point of view, the different types of institutions in the total movement will help the reader to clarify his understanding of the movement as a whole. Among senior institutions there are diversities—liberal arts colleges, public and private universities, institutes of technology, specialized and professional schools of many kinds.

Table VI is published to show comparative growth and enrollments for public and private junior colleges. The year 1921-22 witnessed the public colleges passing the independent in enrollments.

Since that time, the gap between these types has widened. It is significant, however, that since 1951-52 the rate of increase in enrollments has held quite steady. This is especially significant in view of the fact that the net gain in the establishment of public colleges has been greater than of the independent. In 1956-57, the net gain in public colleges compared to that in independent colleges was only two-tenths of one per cent. Suggestions have been made that the Directory might very well include a column to indicate the equated full-time enrollments of all junior colleges. If this were done, it is likely that the spread between public and private enrollments would be lessened. Almost all private colleges are residential and for this reason the percentage of full-time students is probably greater than in those under public control. In any event, the difference between enrollments in the two types of junior colleges compares almost exactly with the differences between enrollments in public and private secondary schools, rather than between enrollments in public and private senior colleges and universities.

In Table VII, it may be observed that students indicated as "others" include specials and adults. We have continued this table because it was used in this manner until 1947-48 to identify all students who were not classified as freshmen and sophomores. Table VIII was added in the 1947-48 reports for the further breakdown between specials and adults. For 1956-57, these students outnumbered those who were classified as freshmen and sophomores. The reader may wish to trace the increasing numbers and percentages of adults and special students from the year 1936-37 to 1956-57 to see what has happened during the past 20 years. The functions of upgrading, retraining employed persons in communities, and of extending cultural and recreational courses to adults have been largely responsible for this increase. The performance of these functions shows that many two-year colleges are becoming more sensitive to community needs outside regular collegiate offerings for those working for degrees. In Table VIII, it may be seen that the percentage of special students in 1956-57 decreased slightly from the former year, but not as much as in 1955-56 compared to the previous year. On the other hand, adult enrollments increased by 12.4 per cent compared to a decrease of 10.3 the previous year. In some parts of the country there has been a trend for persons beyond the average college age to become classified and work toward the associate's degree. It may take them several years to accomplish this purpose. This writer, for example, recalls the graduation in a junior college in a city of about 12,000 inhabitants in which the average age of 240 graduating students was 29 years. Many of these students had studied part-time for from four to six years as classified students in order to obtain a full two-year college education. If this should become a stronger trend across the country, it is possible that reporting by categories would change considerably. Is there a trend for older adults to enroll in well-organized curriculums in place of taking hit and miss subjects, and to work for associate's degrees instead of entertaining no particular educational objective? In some communities this is a definite trend. How far it may get throughout the country remains to be seen.

Table IX shows the distribution of enrollments with respect to the size of the public and private junior colleges and totals for both types. While there were only eight public colleges with enrollments of less than 50 in the previous year, there are 11 reported in this issue, largely due to newly organized institutions. On the other hand, private colleges numbered 33 last year with less than 50 students; this year there are only 26. In the public colleges for last year there were 50 with enrollments between 1,000 and 1,999; this year there are 63 and the private colleges remain at the same number of 13. Public colleges with enrollments over 9,000 increased from 13 to 18 this year compared to last year. In round numbers, the average enrollment for all institutions in 1955-56 was 1,205; this year it is 1,334. For public colleges in the previous year the average enrollment was 1,881; this year it is 2,059. For private colleges, this year the average enrollment is 332 compared to 303 in the previous year.

JUNIOR COLLEGE FACULTIES

Combined full-time and part-time members of faculties for 1956-57 reached an all time high with 30,651. Full-time members increased from 13,818 to 15,718, and part-time teachers increased from 13,175 to 14,933. This increase of 3,658 full-time and part-time teachers in one year highlights one of the most critical issues in all higher education. It is likely that we shall not be able to keep drastic measures are adopted at the earliest possible time.

TYPES OF JUNIOR COLLEGES

Types of junior colleges in respect to control are 377 public or tax supported and 275 privately controlled or church-related. Table X shows the distribution of control among the non-tax supported junior colleges.

The co-educational junior college is the prevailing type in respect to distribution by sex. There are 529 institutions of this type, 74 junior colleges for women, and 49 for men. In terms of the number of years in which the colleges are organized, the two-year institution is by far the leading type with 607; there are 18 organized under the four-year plan (grades 11 through 14), 14 organized under the three-year type, and three offering one year of education. Generally speaking, in co-educational public junior colleges men outnumber women about two to one.

REGIONAL ACCREDITATION OF JUNIOR COLLEGES

Table XI will show the reader the number of public and private colleges and the totals, including percentages, which are accredited by the six regional accrediting associations. These data are for the United States only. The variations between regions is striking and shows the need for junior colleges to take immediate steps to correct this defect in some states. If the reader wishes to pursue this phase of investigation a little further, we suggest that he may study accreditation of colleges by states. The list of junior colleges in the first sections of the Directory affords information on this item. It is possible that some junior colleges were regionally accredited in the late fall of 1957 but were not so reported to the Washington office in time to be included in the Directory.

ASSOCIATION MEMBERSHIP

Some gains have been made in the membership of the Association during the year 1957. There are 475 active members compared to 462 last year, and 7 provisional members compared to 6 in 1956. By glancing over the list of colleges in Table I, the reader will find that a considerable number of states have 100 per cent membership and several have almost this percentage.
